News

DID YOU KNOW?

By Fresh Print Staff

February was Black History month and Fresh Print wanted create a section to dedicate to all our students with African American heritage. American Samoa is not much of a “melting pot” of many different people, but we think the American Samoa Community College is diverse enough for us to appreciate all cultures. So in honor of our African American brothers and sisters, here are a couple of facts about Black History Month.

- This observance was created to remember the important people and events in the history of the African movements around the world
- The United States of America and Canada recognizes Black History Month in February, whereas the United Kingdom has it on the month of October.
- Black History Month can alternatively be called, African-American History Month.
- Black History Month was first celebrated in 1926 in the United States, 1987 in the United Kingdom and 1995 in Canada.

We hope you enjoyed these fun tidbits, and remember to recognize your fellow classmates with African American heritage.

I Tried

A poem by BIGUCE

as the boys take to their seats, the conductor resumes his role.
 the weather is being selfish but we must continue the show.
 he adjusts the proximity mic til it surrenders to his thundering tone.
 today must be open mic i guess, i guess ill open on the microphone.
 before he could wrap up the opening remarks i rise to claim the throne.
 i clutch my references as i walk for i know i am not alone.
 others have journeyed before my time to acknowledge the fruits theyve grown.
 this is not a farmers convention but you do reap what you sow.
 finally my time has come as my body limps towards the mic.
 my internals turn into butterflies and my courage is exposed as a lie.
 i tried to speak of adam and eve, and the fruit that opened their eyes.
 i tried to merge into the life of noah, honestly, i really tried.
 stories of moses and abinadi unravel with every word.
 i testify of the gadianton robbers though it did seem a bit absurd.
 i gather what lil i knew about the stripling warriors of then.
 they were two thousand strong, today youd be lucky to come across five maybe ten.
 im feeling incredible. the spirit unfolds, as i speak of the only begotten.
 im uncontrollable, so ive been told, im weak and so ive forgotten.
 my vision impaired as i stand there and stare, as everything that surrounds me, is suddenly pulled into a whirlpool of blur i scream as reality hits me.
 what just ocured. what did i do as eyes lay frozen upon me.
 was that a howl, a roar, or a squeal? and then it finally hits me.
 as the boys take their seats, the conductor speaks, suddenly i felt weak.
 for during the sacrament of testimony sunday, i was fast asleep.

Thinking...
By Anonymous

So, I've been drinking the liquid courage
Coaxing the depressing future thoughts to come,
And the reality that my own being will take this to flourish
The thoughts of reality to crumble my being having it come undone.

So, I've been thinking dangerous thoughts.
Hazardous ones that'll keep you second guessing.
To keep you alert, scared, and on your toes.
Our safety is what I am fundamentally testing.

So, I've been thinking the impossible.
Thoughts of love, being ever so patient but is so hard to find.
Some say, "Good things come to those who wait,"
But eventually the proverb itself is a waste of time.

Sadly, I've been thinking too much of myself.
I'm thinking of problems like why I cannot sleep peacefully.
Or why I can't be happy, forever remaining melancholy.
Sadly, I can't begin to fathom just how much I've been thinking.
